FOREWORD

IN presenting this graphic summary of the achievements of leading citizens of the Rocky Mountain States the Denver Press Club feels that it is doing a service which has long been neglected. For several years there has existed a definite need, even a demand, for such a work as this volume embraces. From the newspapers, the magazines and other sources, including public libraries, has come a sustained inquiry for information and photographic material pertaining to those whose identity is so closely merged with the progress, growth and development of the region of the Rockies.

In its compilation it has been necessary to eliminate, rather than to urge representation in order to maintain a standard in keeping with those who alone bear the qualifications which were the basis of their selection.

Here will be found the leaders in every line of endeavor—industry, letters, statecraft, education, social progress. To them instinctively looks every cause which is designed to promote the general welfare. It is with a view to diffusing the knowledge of their works, and of rousing in the hearts of those who shall come to citizenship after them a desire for similar patriotic service that this book is brought before the public.

"Who's Who in the Rockies" is intended to answer the very question implied by its name.

THE DENVER PRESS CLUB.

The
DENVER PRESS CLUB CREED

EVER SINCE its birth in 1905, the Denver Press Club has been a vital force in the Rocky Mountain region.

Never in politics, it always has fought against anything that tended to bring disgrace to Colorado and striven for everything that would maintain the sacred ideals of the Commonwealth. Never in business, it nevertheless has sought to encourage commerce and industry, to criticize honestly, and to stamp out unmanliness and cowardice, to quicken good impulses, and crush that which is dishonest and unfair.

Its charities, though limited, are discriminating, heartfelt and unheralded.

The Denver Press Club stands for that which is clean, that which is right, that which is ethical, and that which is honorable. It seeks to destroy the germs of wrong and to plant the seeds of right thinking and right living.

It represents a profession whose breadth and power is limited only by the confines of the world itself. Its basic membership is composed exclusively of newspapermen in Denver and throughout the state.
